Baghdad bans civilian fuel sales

Associated Press

RIYADH, Saudi Arabia — Iraqi warplanes and the USS Missouri's guns shattered the morning peace from Baghdad to Kuwait's battered shores Tuesday.

Iraq banned sales of heating oil and other fuel to its increasingly desperate people.

Baghdad said 428 civilians have been killed thus far in what the official radio condemned as "savage" bombing.

The Syrian contingent in Operation Desert Storm engaged in its last combat, driving 30 Iraqi fighters back into Kuwait with heavy fire, Saudi officials reported.

In telephone calls and private meetings, diplomats and government leaders conferred on Monday's bid by Iranian President Mohammad Khatami to mediate a Persian Gulf peace.

The Soviets and Turks signaled support for Iran's initiative.

In Washington, however, President Bush said he had seen no Iraqi peace plan and saw nothing to negotiate with Iraqi President Saddam Hussein.

"He's got to say, 'I'm going to get out of Kuwait,' now, fast," Bush said.

Bush said he was sending the Pentagon's top leadership — Defense Secretary Dick Cheney and Gen. Colin L. Powell — to the war zone this week to assess how the U.S.-led offensive against Iraq is progressing.

The U.S. command reported another 2,000-soldier day in the Desert Storm air war, and said American warplanes took special aim again at the dug-in Republican Guard, the backbone of the Iraqi defense of Kuwait.

bombers struck Guard positions, the command said.

It said U.S. warplanes also continued focusing on resupply lines to the Iraqi troops in Kuwait and southern Iraq, striking a 25-truck convoy in one instance late Monday.

British officers reported strikes on an ammunition storage site south of Baghdad, and a railway junction and rail bridge in southeast Iraq, among other targets.

They said one-third of the key bridges in Iraq have been destroyed.

A key U.S. Air Force commander, Col. John McBroom of the First Tactical Fighter Wing, told reporters Tuesday that some Iraqi ground units' fighting "capabilities" have been cut in half by allied air strikes.

Baghdadis were told by official radio Tuesday that all fuel sales to civilians had been banned.

The Iraqi capital's water supplies were already partly cut off and its electricity has been totally cut off.

U.S. Marines practice amphibious assaults

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A Marine amphibious task force is heading into the Persian Gulf after wrapping up a "dress rehearsal" amphibious assault on the southern shore of the Saudi Arabian peninsula, Pentagon sources said.

Eight thousand Marines from the amphibious task force pounced on the coast of Oman near the island of Masirah, one of the sources said, "using every kind of aerial assault, amphibious vehicle, helicopter and landing craft they had."

The sources called the event a "major exercise" that took place over a two-week period. It was the latest of four Marine Corps exercises held since the Marines arrived in Saudi Arabia in August.

The exercises are being staged to keep the amphibious warriors sharp in case President Bush decides to mount a land campaign against the forces of Saddam Hussein dug into Kuwait or Iraq.

Bush said Tuesday he would make his decision on a ground assault based on recommendations from his top military advisers, but he was skeptical that air attacks alone would be enough to drive the Iraqis out of Kuwait.

The 17,000-member Marine task force is back in the water and "slowly working its way north," said one Marine Corps officer. "We intend to keep Saddam awake."

Bush sends top aides to the gulf

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Bush said Tuesday he doubts Iraq's army can be expelled from Kuwait without a ground war and announced he is sending Defense Secretary Dick Cheney and Gen. Colin Powell to the Persian Gulf for a "firsthand status report."

Bush, at a news conference, said "it would be a lot easier to see a successful conclusion" if Saddam Hussein were ousted or killed, but he stressed that the U.S. objective was still simply to drive Saddam's forces from Kuwait. Any other world leader would have yielded by now rather than submit his country to relentless bombings and missile attacks, Bush said.

Spelling out rigid conditions for any cease-fire, Bush said Saddam would have to undertake "a credible, visible, totally convincing withdrawal" and return Kuwait's exiled leadership to power.

Bush portrayed himself as being at peace with himself, comfortable with the momentous decisions of sending American troops into battle. "I'm sleeping quite well, as a matter of fact."

Bush said he would not reinstate the draft.

And he said he did not intend to propose an income surtax to help pay for the war.

Declaring himself to be pleased with the conduct of the war, Bush said, "I don't believe it's going to be long and drawn out."

Bush said Cheney and Powell, the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, would go to Saudi Arabia late this week to confer with Gen. Norman Schwarzkopf, the commander of allied forces.

Cause of death still under investigation

Body identified as 'Y' student

BY ROMMYN SKIPPER

The man found dead outside the Provo Temple Monday night has been identified as a BYU student, said a representative from the Provo City Police Department.

Gary Lambert, 21, of Farmington, was found leaning against the temple fence with a gunshot wound to the head, said Lt. Gesison of the Provo police.

"A large caliber weapon (a rifle), was found next to the victim," he said.

"It's still under investigation," said Sgt. Kim Nisson, the detective assigned to the case, "but it appears to be a self-inflicted gunshot wound." Lambert was pronounced dead at the scene by the Utah County medical examiner.

Lambert's parents and an uncle, who is a BYU English professor, have been notified of his death, Nisson said.

Rebecca Patterson, a 19-year-old freshman majoring in business marketing from Glendora, Calif., was one of the first people to find Lambert's body. She and three friends were driving by the temple when they saw Lambert in their headlights.

"It was so weird to drive up on it. It's not something you expect to see in Provo," Patterson said.

Patterson said they called the police from a house near the temple.

Elliot Cameron, president of the Provo Temple, said that he thought Lambert felt a need to be near the temple. "We're saddened. Nothing like this has ever happened before."

"Death is always tragic," said Paul Richards, BYU director of public communications. "No matter what the cause, it affects the whole university family."

Student Life is generally responsible for contacting the parents of BYU students who are injured or killed, Richards said.

Bush presents plan for big bank overhaul

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The Bush administration on Tuesday proposed a landmark overhaul of the nation's banking system that would reduce government guarantees to depositors and break down traditional walls between banks and other businesses.

The recommendations are the Bush administration's response to a rising tide of bank failures unrivaled since the Depression.

Prepared by the Treasury Department after 18 months study, the package would put the financial system through the biggest changes in 50 years, affecting nearly every American who borrows and saves.

For the first time since the establishment of federal deposit insurance in 1934, government guarantees to bank customers would shrink rather than expand.

Individual depositors would be covered for no more than $200,000 per institution, eliminating combinations of trust and joint accounts that let families insure more than $1 million.

Customers may be able to get a car loan, shares in a mutual fund and a life insurance policy at their bank, which could be owned by a department store chain.

The long-awaited proposals must be approved by Congress, where many legislators are wary of repeating mistakes that worsened the savings and loan crisis.

"The administration makes a mistake in proposing new and risky activities for banks before the supervisory and (deposit) insurance reforms are in place and working," said Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez, D-Texas, chairman of the House Banking Committee.

Treasury Secretary Nicholas F. Brady said, "We must have a modern world-class financial services system in the U.S."

Lambert struggled with depression, Tourette's Syndrome

BY GEOFFREY M. THATCHER
Daily Universe Staff Writer

Gary Lambert's family said Tuesday they were shocked by their son's death but said the 21-year-old was a winner and a great kid who had a physical illness.

Gary suffered from a chemical imbalance and depression from a disease called Gilles de la Tourette's Syndrome. He was diagnosed with the disease last July.

Gary was the student body president at Davis High School in Laytonville. He served a mission in Seattle, ran 22 full marathons — including the Boston Marathon — was a person-to-person exchange student in Russia and played the harmonica in a rock band.

Gary's best friend, Matt Thomas, a freshman from Farmington, said Gary was a "great guy" and was a good influence. He said one of Gary's best traits was his wit.

Gary spent his last hours Monday night with his family home evening group and gave the spiritual thought.

His aunt Ann Lambert was told

Gary quoted Woody Allen. "There are two states of being in this life, one of those is horrible, and one is miserable."

Gary told his group to be thankful for the good times.

Gary was living with his aunt and uncle while attending BYU. His uncle Neal Lambert, a BYU professor of English, said, "The biggest thing that comes from all this is that just to assume someone is OK isn't enough. We need everybody."

David G. Weight, professor of psychology at BYU, said Tourette's disease is biological and organic in nature but is not clearly understood.

He said the symptoms can include impulse and behavior disorders that can be "terribly frustrating to an individual." Although not familiar with Gary's case, Weight said, "It takes a terrible emotional toll."

"He's had a struggle for a while," Gary's father said. Problems came upon him hard and fast.

Thomas said Gary was almost afraid of being happy. "Gary almost feared enjoying himself because of the depression that would follow."

When a family friend heard of

Gary's death she said she hoped he has found peace.

Gary Lambert's funeral will be Friday at 1 p.m. in the Farmington South Stake Center, 695 S. 200 E., Farmington. Friends may call between 11:45 a.m. and 12:45 p.m.

NEWS DIGEST

Compiled from staff and news service reports

U.S. cost of war $15 billion, Bush says

WASHINGTON — President Bush said Tuesday that $51 billion in pledges from allied countries should enable the United States to contain its own spending for the first months of the Persian Gulf War to $15 billion.

But on Capitol Hill, Democrats complained that the United States has received little of the promised monetary help and pressed the administration to aggressively collect it and seek more.

White House budget chief Richard Darman told Congress he was confident the money would arrive and said Bush's campaign for the assistance has gone better than anticipated.

Darman visited the Senate Budget Committee, where he testified on the $1.45 trillion fiscal 1992 budget Bush unveiled Monday.

He talked of the president's plan to shift some spending within Medicare, education and other programs to poorer beneficiaries from those better able to pay. However, he spent much of his time parrying questions about the war costs.

"We have extraordinary contributions, way more than people had expected," Darman told the budget panel.

Germany has pledged $6.6 billion and Japan has promised $9 billion, Darman noted.

At the White House, Bush told reporters the $51 billion in promised foreign help should be sufficient.

Sugar might ease pain for newborns

CHICAGO — A study that found sugar can ease newborns' reactions to pain is the first to establish a strong link between taste and the way humans respond to the sensation of pain, researchers said Tuesday.

The 1989 study of 54 newborns examined pain responses in two common procedures in newborn infants.

Infants cried significantly less during the procedures when given sucrose than when given a placebo, according to researchers led by Elliott M. Blass, then a psychologist at Johns Hopkins University in Baltimore.

Of the 30 infants who were circumcised, those given pacifiers dipped in sugar solution cried 31 percent of the time during the procedure, compared with 49 percent for the water-pacifier group and 67 percent for the infants who received nothing, the study found. Of the 24 infants from whom blood was drawn, those who got an oral dose of sugar cried 50 percent less during the procedure than those who got water. The study does not claim that sugar reduces pain but it may trigger the release of natural painkillers in the body.

Bombing cuts Iraqi army's effectiveness

EASTERN SAUDI ARABIA — Increasingly heavy allied bombing has cut the effectiveness of some of Saddam Hussein's ground troops by more than half, and even harsher punishment is planned in the days ahead, a senior U.S. Air Force officer said Tuesday.

The relentless U.S.-led bombing also is cutting supply lines to Iraqi troops at "a pretty fantastic rate," said Col. John McBroom, commander of the First Tactical Fighter Wing.

McBroom said more bombing runs are being aimed at Saddam's troops each day.

The allies are able to concentrate on the troops because they are easing up on earlier targets, including Iraq's nuclear and chemical facilities.

"Most of our sorties now are geared toward attriting out the people in Kuwait," McBroom said, using the military euphemism for killing.

"We're taking a very heavy toll on the troops. ... (The) Republican Guard south through Kuwait, most of the packages are going in that area."

McBroom said the success of air attacks on Iraqi troops had convinced him that any plans for an allied ground assault should be put on hold.

Wars usually named by press, public

NEW YORK — If history's any guide, the Persian Gulf War will go down as ... well, the Persian Gulf War. Although soldiers fight wars, journalists and their audiences usually name them, according to military historians.

"We do not have an official name," said Janice McKinney of the Army Center of Military History in Washington.

"There is no one actual person or office with the authority to name our wars."

"The military accepts whatever has been accepted by the public," said Russell Weigley of Temple University.

Naming wars is as imprecise an art as fighting them, but a brief name works its way into common usage and sticks.

The Associated Press and many other news organizations are calling the current conflict in the Middle East the Persian Gulf War.

It also has been called "Operation Desert Storm" and "the War with Iraq." The Iraqis have referred to it as "The Mother of All Battles."

Father of concert victim files lawsuit

SALT LAKE CITY — The father of a 14-year-old crushed by a surging crowd at an AC-DC hard rock concert has filed an $8 million lawsuit alleging "willful, malicious conduct" by the band, promoter and arena managers.

The wrongful-death suit filed in 3rd District Court is the first stemming from the death of Curtis Child and two other teen-agers who were trampled as a crowd rushed the stage at the Jan. 18 concert at the Salt Palace.

Child's father, Bruce C. Child of Logan, said "the incident was caused by willful, malicious conduct" by the defendants, who include a security company.

They also "manifested a knowing and reckless disregard of the rights of Curtis White Child and other persons attending the concert," he said.

Child seeks $5 million in punitive damages, $3 million in general damages and an unspecified amount for medical, funeral and special damages to be determined at trial.

Child's attorney, R. Craig Clark Jr. of San Diego, said, "My client's most fervent hope that his son's death is not in vain."

Five men charged in assault of girl

By RENEE HARRIS
Universe Staff Writer

Thirty Utah County adult and juvenile men are suspected of having sexual relations with the same mildly retarded 14-year-old girl.

Five of the men have been charged with sexual crimes and another man is under investigation in connection with the case.

The Utah County district attorney's office began a continuing investigation in April 1990, when Maurice C. Smith, a part-time BYU employee, and William O. Hayes, a retired employee of the BYU research machine shop, were arrested on allegations of sexual misconduct with the girl.

Friday, 4th Circuit Court District Judge George E. Ballif ordered Jack W. Johnston, 55, of Salt Lake City, to undergo a 90-day diagnostic evaluation at the Utah State Prison. Johnston pleaded guilty to a first-degree felony sodomy charge.

Johnston was originally charged with three charges, rape of a child and sodomy on a child, both first degree felonies, and a second degree felony of sexual abuse of a child.

James E. Ragan II, 34, of 80 N. 500 East, American Fork, was charged with two counts of rape and one count of sodomy. He was also charged with two drug charges which are third-degree felonies.

Patrick Burt, 25, Provo, pleaded not guilty to amended charges of second-degree sexual abuse of a child.

District Attorney, Kay Bryson said, "Most (of the suspects) are juveniles that are on the list, only five adults have been charged." The juvenile

Provo City Council members deny having vested interests

By REBECCA INMAN
Universe Staff Writer

Provo City Council members deny having any vested interest on the market in opposing a proposed BYU funded married housing project.

A previous statement by Paul C. Richards, BYU director of public communications, said council members opposed the project because they had "vested interest in the market." A number of council members are involved with real estate and construction companies.

Mark Hathaway, vice chair council member asked, "How would we benefit?" Hathaway said he sees no benefit for any council member, except possibly the listing of available housing.

Ronald Last, council member, said the question is if "non-taxable entities should compete with taxable entities."

Last and Hathaway both said the housing would impact Provo City in that Provo would not receive tax benefits from the new housing.

Hathaway said recommendations were made for BYU and UVCC to help in building housing if the private sector did not suffice. "I commend the university responding to a need, but the private sector would help," Hathaway said.

Richards said, "All across the United States state schools are non-taxable entities and have on-campus, adequate housing. BYU has the right to provide for its own function."

A public hearing concerning this issue will be held Feb. 19, at 7 p.m. in the Council Chambers of the city building.

Richards said Reagan will speak for about 20 minutes and then participate in a question and answer session. The David M. Kennedy Center for International Studies is coordinating the questions.

People wanting to submit a question should write it on a 3-by-5 note card with their name, address and phone number and turn it into the information booths in the Earnest L. Wilkinson Center or the Abraham O. Smoot Administration Building.

Coordinators at the Kennedy Center will then select questions and Valerie Hudson, assistant professor of political science, will ask the questions, Richards said.

Possibilities of broadcasting the speech on closed circuit television to various campus locations and on KBYU-TV and KBYU-FM are being investigated, he said. The decisions will be made based on the demand for tickets.

Students fervent about peace message

RUSSELL A. FOX
Universe Staff Writer

The BYU Coalition Against War in the Gulf is more than just a group of students concerned about war. To many of its members, the coalition is a social movement as well. Many people see this as a real opportunity to bring about the sort of social changes that weren't accomplished by the Vietnam-era peace movement," said Mark Freeman, a 21-year-old graduate student from Nederland, Colo., pursuing a master's degree in public management. Freeman said he suspected the United States had ambitions in the Middle East beyond defeating Saddam Hussein. Describing what he called "a crisis of capitalist economies," Freeman said the depletion of resources causes exploitation in war. Social action is needed if political freedoms are to be preserved, he said.

In reference to the war, Freeman said, "I really believe that we (the United States) have been looking for something like this for a long time."

While several other supporters of the movement agree, the coalition does represent many different attitudes.

"Obviously we come from diverse backgrounds," said Kristin Rushforth in Orem, one of the leaders of the coalition. "There are people in the group who voted for President Bush or otherwise," she said.

The BYU Coalition Against War in the Gulf was initially organized to present the opposition to America's participation in the war with Iraq, felt by "numerous groups on campus," a member said.

Some people have come up to us and accused us of not being BYU students, of not representing anyone here at BYU," said Rushforth, a 21-year-old English major. "That's simply not the case."

Rushforth went on to say that out of more than 200 people who have pledged support to the movement, there are only three or four non-students. It is a large student movement.

The BYU movement is special in many ways, said Matt Stannard, 23, a philosophy major from West Jordan. "I can't speak for the entire group, but I feel that a lot of our opposition to the war is driven by the Spirit; like a calling of sorts. That's the source of much of our strength."

According to coalition leaders, the student movement here at BYU is stronger than anywhere else in Utah, including the University of Utah, which is typically seen as a far more "liberal" institution.

"They (the University of Utah) have come and asked us for help in organizing their opposition groups," Stannard said.

While the coalition does consist mainly of BYU students, others are involved. Several Utah Valley Community College students regularly attend coalition meetings, as do some local senior citizens.

Fern Turner, a 76-year-old resident of Provo, said she involves herself in the group because "war does not solve the problems — war makes ones who engage in it a part of the problem and much like the enemy." The peace group at BYU is "inspired," Turner said.

The BYU group is planning to participate in World Student Action Day on Feb. 21. Peace activists worldwide will mark the day with demonstrations, teach-ins and other activities aimed at instructing people on the nature of the war.

Representatives from the BYU coalition have attended peace rallies in San Francisco and Washington, D.C. About 50 BYU students participated in the San Francisco rally, which involved more than 250,000 people.

"The rally was a great event for people from Utah," said Loa Niumeitulo, 20, an English major from Tonga who attended the rally. "It's so easy to feel alienated around here that it's great to see that there are a lot of people who agree with you."

Bill Duncan, a political science major from Victorville, Calif., who also went to the San Francisco rally, agreed. He said the rally "strengthened a feeling of community" among the protesters.

"We're such a minority here, and we get a lot of abuse. It's nice to know we're not alone," he said.

The BYU coalition receives a fair amount of abuse everyday, according to the members who staff a booth in the Stepdown Lounge, ELWC, dispensing literature and trying to make their point of view known. Members say they will be there every day until the war ends.

"I don't think the people who call us 'un-American' have a very clear understanding of what it means to be an American," Freeman said. He said people need to remember that the troops fighting are human beings with lives of their own.

Stannard agreed, saying, "The people who say we're 'anti-American' aren't very democratic. President Bush needs to know there are a lot of people who don't trust him and are watching him very closely."

Conference on family starts today

By VIKKI K. CARLSON
Universe Staff Writer

An award-winning author and historian will address the first general session of BYU's International Conference on Gender and the Family at 11 a.m. today in 375 ELWC.

Laurel Thatcher Ulrich will speak on the topic "Women's History and Family History: Can This Marriage Be Saved?" The floor will then be opened for questions from noon to 12:30 p.m.

Ulrich is a specialist in early American history, and she is the author of a new book, "A Midwife's Tale: The Life of Martha Ballard Based on Her Diary, 1785-1812."

BYU family science professor and conference chair Barbara Vance said Ulrich has a way of looking at women's journals "that don't tell anything" and comparing them to the time period to find meaning.

BYUSA nominating committee strives for continued success

CAMIE OAKS
Universe Staff Writer

The vision of BYUSA is to provide an opportunity for students to develop leadership through service and to incorporate the teachings and example of the Savior in a life situation.

Coordinator of Student Leadership Development and Lucero said students will hopefully take these qualities with them when they leave BYU to work in other communities.

Lucas Sumpter, director of Student Leadership Development, said one way to accomplish this goal is to select a president to lead the Student Service Association who understands the vision of BYUSA.

Because of this need, the restructuring committee provided that a nominating committee be organized to perform the function of nominating candidates.

The nominating committee consists of seven students, two members of the outgoing BYUSA presidency, two student Advisory Council members and three students chosen at random. There are also three people from the administration: two deans and one faculty member.

The committee meets and reviews the qualifications of potential candidates. Then, by way of vote, the committee nominates those candidates eligible to run for president.

According to Tamara M. Quick, assistant dean of Student Life and managing director of Student Leadership Development, the main purpose of the nominating committee is to continue the success of the program that has been established. "We don't want to start over every few months, we want someone who understands the job and is competent to do a good job," Quick said.

Sumpter compared the BYUSA selection process to a learning curve. Under ASBYU, the old student association, the curve would represent a gradual increase to a high point at the end of each year because of its accomplishments.

Then a new president would be elected, and the curve would drop off in a sharp decline because of the new president's lack of experience, Sumpter said.

Tom Kallunki, assistant director of Student Programs, said in ASBYU the elections were run through a self-nominating process. He said if anyone wanted to go through the trauma of an election situation and campaign they could.

"A much broader population of student body is reached through the application process rather than the election process," Sumpter said.

He said all of the applicants for president must possess certain qualifications to be nominated. They include experience, evidence of leadership, a good standing with the university and, most importantly, an understanding of the vision of the association.

These qualifications are reviewed by the nominating committee in two forms. Each applicant must fill out a written application and be interviewed by the nominating committee. When the interviews are finished, the committee votes, and the candidates for president are announced.

Sumpter said all students who apply are qualified in most areas, and the committee is confident that any one of them have the qualities to take the association forward.

OPINION

Open discussion enlightens minds

"Pro-choice" vs. "pro-life," anti-war rallies vs. support rallies — current topics and events for public debate and discussion. Most of us hold strong opinions favoring one side and opposing the other. We're lucky to live in a nation that glorifies verbal grappling.

Last week in China, a three-hour trial was held for Wang Dan, a student leader of the Tiananmen Square protest. Wang was charged with "counter revolutionary propaganda and incitement." The judges, as well as his government-appointed lawyer assumed Wang was guilty before the trial began. In defense, Wang spoke from a prepared text at his trial, saying that his goal was to promote changes within the system, not to overthrow the Communist Party.

In China, 98 percent of defendants are found guilty. Wang was sentenced to four years in prison — a lenient punishment based somewhat on his repentant attitude. A harsh punishment for expressing an opinion, however.

Simply making an opposing viewpoint known is a form of persuasion. It may serve to reinforce beliefs or to challenge them — either way, it allows for comparison and increased understanding.

No doubt Soviet officials wonder why the Baltic States seem so set on obtaining independence. With the help of the mass media, these people have new access to a wealth of information and varied viewpoints. According to the Foreign Ministry for the Supreme Soviet: "the ideas of freedom and democracy, the supremacy of law and order and the freedom of choice are increasingly taking hold of people's thinking. Individuals and people who are now in a position to compare things are demanding conditions and a quality of life that progress can provide."

Unfortunately, we don't have to look as far as China and the Soviet Union to find examples of stifled debate and closed discussion.

The reaction of certain national organizations to the abortion bill that passed Utah's legislature last week is a perfect example. Admittedly, the bill is of debatable ethical and legal merit. However, the National Organization for Women's response was not to take up the debate, but to call for a boycott on Utah tourism—including conventions, skiing and attempting to undermine Utah's bid for the Winter Olympics. Instead of espousing a possible test case to challenge the law, the group chose to espouse economic terrorism.

Even closer to home, we can see at BYU a closing of the the debate between students who support the war and those calling for peace.

As the fervor to support the U.S.' decision to go to war spreads across campus, so do the stories of students being intimidated into silence. The numbers and actions of those opposed to the peace movement have effectively quieted much of the debate. BYU's Arab Club, for example, chose to withdraw its Friday Night Live booth instead of facing the possible hassles and abuse that it, along with BYUSA and Student Life officials, feared might take place.

True discussion of the war issue has been buried under name-calling, scripture bashing and the questioning of both sides' moral character.

Not only is this behavior an injustice to the individual victims, but our entire campus loses the benefits of free discussion and the exploration of different viewpoints.

Instead of bickering about our differences and throwing cheap shots at the "liberal feminists" or the "sunshine and daisy left-overs from the 60s," among others, let's celebrate them! Approach topics with an open mind, allow for differences and the slight possibility that the other side may have something worthwhile to offer.

Mr. Wang, from his Chinese prison cell, would agree.

Blake is different

To the Editor:

To be honest I never have had much desire to write, but after reading "BYUSA clones?" (Letters to the Editor, Feb 4) I suddenly gained a desire.

It was Kevin Woolley's statement "all of this year's candidates are conservative suit wearing, phony-smile flashing, administration's rear-end kissing, dress-code-loving phonies" that gave me the sudden urge to write.

I guess the reason I'm writing is because during this last year I have had the opportunity to work as a volunteer in a few of BYUSA's programs and in doing so I have met Brett Blake and have gained respect and admiration for the type of person he is.

Now Kevin on the other hand, I find it hard to have any respect for. All I can understand from his article is that his choice as a candidate (Bart Simpson) represents him well. They both seem to have big mouths.

I do have to give him a little credit. He did motivate me to learn more about the candidates. I already know two of them, and I will now take the time to get to know the rest of them. This way I can vote and help select someone who will truly represent the student body. I encourage everyone who reads this to do the same or we just might end up being represented by a Kevin Woolley.

Unethical cloning

To the Editor:

I applaud the principles and precepts contained in the Feb. 4

"BYUSA clones?" letter submitted by Kevin Woolley. But as a microbiologist I must refute one point contained therein. As a scientist, I am governed by a strict ethical code which would absolutely forbid the cloning of such people as Brett Blake.

The social, political and environmental catastrophe released on the world by such an experiment would rival the combined chaos of nuclear waste, global warming and the war in the Persian Gulf. In addition, the notable genetic mutations mentioned by Mr. Woolley (phony-smile flashing, administration-selected, administration's rear-end kissing, etc.) would make such an undertaking foolhardy, as the progeny would hardly be viable outside of the Utah Valley microenvironment. In the future, we would ask Mr. Woolley to please research the facts before making such audacious accusations; we conclude that the cloning of Brett Blake is a Food Services accident.

I also support Bart Simpson as a write-in candidate for the BYUSA presidency.

Geneva's jobs

To the Editor:

With regards to Gary Page of Salt Lake, who wrote "Provo Haze" (Letter to the Editor Feb. 4), it's apparent that you were here to witness the period of Geneva's shutdown and enjoy Utah's naturally pristine air. But I wonder, were you perceptive enough to recognize that the only people enjoying it besides yourself were other BYU intelligentsia? Were you perceptive enough to see the ravages of an encompassing unemployment and the innumerable individual cases of pain that comprised it?

In all fairness, you did make an excellent point. Geneva is a business and therefore under the direct influence of capitalist economics — chief of which is profit motivation. However, you forgot to add that the men who own and manage Geneva are capable of possessing qualities above and beyond those typically associated with Rockefeller and Vanderbilt. They are men of integrity and honor and consequently committed to higher ideals. They have actively pursued pollution reduction measures as part of their $239 million modernization plans in order to become both more responsible and competitive.

I commend your attempts to be environmentally conscious, as slanted and biased as they are. I encourage your attempts to improve our community. However, I necessarily deplore your argument that the managers of Geneva are nothing more than capitalists in the extreme. Furthermore, I detest your incessant whining without proving a single solution to the issue short of closing it back down and leaving the life-long residents of Utah County to deal with the pain of unemployment.

A time for war

To the Editor:

Religious factions that are against war and killing, which claim to base their belief on the Holy Bible, obviously don't read it. They base their belief on one verse taken from the Ten Commandments: "Thou shalt not kill." Yet did not God, which gave us this commandment institute capital punishment? (Exodus 21:12-27)

Did not Ecclesiastes promulgate the sagacious law: "To everything there is a season and a time to every purpose under heaven..." including a "time for war?"

Not only has Saddam Hussein committed grievous crimes of oppression and murder, but he shows absolutely no indication of discontinuing such activity. This war is not about the price of oil. We have our own oil should prices go too high. This war is about a tyrant who obviously has no value for human life, except his own; about a power-monger who doesn't seem satisfied to rule his own country; and about an irrational menace to our world — both demographically and environmentally.

I agree with Pres. Bush wholeheartedly in his statement: "War is never without the loss of innocent life and that is war's greatest tragedy."

But when a war must be fought for the greater good, it is our grave obligation to conduct a war in proportion to the threat.

A time for peace

To the Editor:

Those who are vying for peace, in my opinion, are the ones that have shown common sense and leadership. Why? Because their opinion goes hand-in-hand with the councils of God — "Proclaim peace and denounce war." (Doctrine and Covenants 98:16)

If looked at closer, the United States involvement in war has been morally justified cause, as it has been falsely paraded. Alma 48:11-16 states: "the Nephites were taught to defend themselves," and also "never to give offense." It bothers me that many LDS Church members are treating the warnings of the Book of Mormon as if they are of little value.

I must say I am amazed at how easily Pres. Bush has manipulated American patriotism for his cause. Our military servicemen and women need to stay out of our argument. Sadly, they are at the mercy of our government's decisions and American popular opinion. The focus should be on our leaders.

In my estimation, the western powers had possibilities of preventing Saddam's invasion, yet, western greed now has the excuse of mobilizing 600,000 troops in Saudi Arabia.

I would like to remind you of two more things: First, both Kuwait and Saudi Arabia are ruled by a monarchy. I guess we're not really fighting for democracy and freedom. Second, remember the wicked gentiles who scattered and scourged the American Indians, the small nations that just happened to be in the way of the United States.

In our efforts for the good, let's use a little more common sense, instead taking cheap shots at peace rallies like some BYU students have done. Also means heeding the words of our God a little more carefully.

STUDENT VIEWPOINTS: Opposing war while supporting troops

War does strange things to people. The FBI is questioning Arab-Americans without probable cause. Some major airlines are refusing service to Iraqis, Iraqi-Americans, and Arabs in general. Violence against Arab-Americans (including, ironically, those of Kuwaiti and Saudi descent) has skyrocketed to repugnant levels. And here at BYU, students and faculty opposed to U.S. involvement in the Persian Gulf have been subject to death threats, property damage, and accusations of un-Americanism.

In a recent survey, Newsweek found that a significant number of Americans felt anti-war protests ought to be banned. Such sentiment is understandable: dissidents are seen as hostile to the brave Americans who are carrying out our nation's directive. Protesters are accused of condoning Saddam Hussein's aggression. Phrases such as "short-sighted," "1960's nostalgia" and "giving aid to the enemy" are intermixed with footage from the most violent (and least frequent) Vietnam era protests.

This forms an interesting, but inaccurate picture. The present anti-war movement is not a throwback to the 60s; it is the latest manifestation of a tradition nearly as old as America itself.

Americans began demonstrating against war more than a century ago, when angry Northerners took to the streets in protest of Lincoln's efforts to save the Union by force (Earlier in America, an anti-war activist could be punished under various sedition laws). There were protests against the imperialistic Spanish-American War. During World War I, socialist presidential candidate Eugene Debs received more than one million votes while in prison for his dissent to Wilson's war-drive. The protests have continued, right on through America's invasion of Panama, and now our action in the Near East. For every war, there have been protesters.

Anti-war movements have never cost America a single military victory. And even if it could be documented that such opposition hinders the strategic security or morale of our military efforts (and these assertions have never been proven, even in Vietnam) it still remains to be shown that suppressing dissent — let's be frank: undermining democracy — is justified when our statesmen claim we are at war for democracy's sake. Freedom at the cost of freedom results in negligible gain; kind of like answering violence with violence.

On the contrary, strong dissent is vital to maintain moral and prudent policies during times of war. By continuing to voice strong opposition to the war, Americans will let George "read my polls" Bush know that he has no blank check to fulfill his aims. Bush will be aware that he is under constant, critical scrutiny; that any moral failure on his part will cost him his political career. Bush has promised to withdraw the troops as soon as we've achieved our objectives (whatever they may be). Only the anti-war movement can force Bush to define these objectives and keep his promise to bring our loved ones home.

Anti-war groups have been accused of not "supporting the troops" because we oppose the decisions that sent them there. This is absurd. We love the men and women who have been thrust into conflict. We "support" them in that we want them home where they belong. We "support" them in that we don't want their lives wasted for an ambiguous cause. The failure to separate support for the troops from support for the war is too irrational to warrant a response. It is the rhetoric of a pathological ideology.

Because opposition to the war is so widespread — encompassing conservatives, retired military, Marxists, Birchers, grandmothers, libertarians, clergy, as well as pacifists — any attempt to silence the movement will result in the oppression of all kinds of Americans; not simply the "radicals." The opposition is "all sorts of everybody." That's beautiful, and that's what America is all about.

Dissent is an indispensable part of American pluralism. Go ahead and try to imagine what it would be like if protests were banned. Here's a clue: think China.

Matthew Stannard

If you have noticed the exaggerated media coverage that the war protesters have received from the onset of hostilities in the Middle East, and you support the troops in their honest effort to rid the world of the menacing Saddam Hussein, then you must realize that those who advocate the cessation of our government's efforts are, even if inadvertently, fighting against those troops as they struggle with the task that is before them.

Our forefathers fought for our freedom and our right to say what our conscience dictates. The same freedom that allows us to protest the war also gives us the right to express our support for those who may die in executing the orders given them by our leaders.

The disparity of this situation is that the decision to be in the conflict was made by the elected representatives of the people who now take it upon themselves to demonstrate — outside of the system — their non-support.

Those, who publicly exercise their right to demonstrate opposition to their own troops — instead of via the election ballot — while troops are engaged in battle are, in effect, spitting upon the graves of all who have and who may yet lay down their lives in defense of that right.

In attempt to sell a product, the media has scrambled to develop programming that would induce viewers to watch. Unfortunately, the troops in this age of communication can, and do, listen to the disproportionate representation of anti-war demonstrations currently being used to fill the programming void (much to the discouragement of our troops, as well as to the elation of Saddam Hussein).

This type of broadcasting only encourages the anti-war movement and represents an unfair bias toward one political view.

I am voicing my concern over this because, I too am opposed to the indiscriminate killing that war and its evils represent. In the past, I have voted for the leaders who felt, would avoid such conflicts, but who believed as I do that freedom is earned and strength is needed to guarantee its existence.

My decision on who to vote for has been guided by personal philosophy that you may maintain your own personal peace by avoiding conflict at all cost. But when the peace is taken away, you are justified in fighting for its return with the same degree of diligence.

Somewhere along the way people have lost sight of the value of standing up to the bully from a position of strength, the responsibility for others and the obligation that the strong have to defend the weak. It could be said that advantage of strength is not a virtue unless it is used to help the disadvantaged.

We must speak out in opposition to the media's exaggerated representation of peace protests at such a crucial time as this — when we are committed to a war and our elected officials have debated the validity of this action and have sanctioned the president's, as well as the UN declaration of the use of force.

Our government was established so that men could express themselves as individuals, as well as collectively on issues. If those who support our elected officials are silent, the majority of Americans will be ignored. Our voice should be heard and felt by those (protesters) who promote a counterproductive and weak behavior, glorified in the media.

Those who oppose the use of force against Iraq are indeed a majority, for their voices were lifted up when their leaders were elected. Those who voted in faith that their elected officials would do what was best for the country now sustain those elected in their actions. Silent yes, but honestly and with prayers for their success.

The troops of the United States Armed Forces do not stand alone — the greater part of the citizens of this country stand with you.

Fairy tales come to life in symphony for kids

By SAMANTHA MCMILLEN
Universe Staff Writer

Walt Disney has provided classic fairy tales in animated form for more than half a century, but Saturday afternoon children can enter a little that was once Symphony Hall and see their favorite stories performed live.

Associate conductor Kirk Mussett will lead the orchestra in pieces from "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs," "Romeo and Juliet," "The Sleeping Beauty," "Cinderella" and "Pinocchio." These pieces will be enhanced with dramatization from actors Tracy Evans, Ron Benson, Heather Callahan and Steve Gray from the University of Utah Theatre Department.

A medieval environment will be provided for the children before each performance as a drawbridge opens for them to enter the royal courtyard.

Activities will include jousting, a mass quartet, a king's court and festive masks for the young knights and fair maidens.

Those participating will be dressed in medieval costume to help create an appropriate ambience for the children.

This performance is the third in a series of four offered for children in the 1990-1991 concert season.

Children and adults are responding positively to the series so far, said Deborah Hendrickson, the public relations director for the Utah Symphony.

The children will be exposed to an educational experience that will train them to be future symphony audiences, said Mark Sheldon of KBYU-FM.

Before each piece the children will be reminded of the events that take place in the story and will also be instructed on what to listen for because each instrument in a piece represents an action or character in the story.

These type of events can have a definite impact on the children, depending on their personalities.

"A lot of kids find it quite interesting," Sheldon said.

"I've been interviewing a lot of conductors and composers who said when they were eight or nine years old they heard a particular piece and were hooked for life."

The concert will open with "Someday My Prince Will Come" from "Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs" and will close with the children joining a young princess in singing "When You Wish Upon A Star."

Europe during Cold War is shown in Allen's play

By SPENCER D. BEDARD
Universe Staff Writer

A plethora of humor spiced with a dash of international espionage comes together in Woody Allen's "Don't Drink The Water," playing at the Hale Center Theater in Salt Lake.

The stage is set in an American embassy in Cold War Europe of the '60s. The ghastly colors of the period are contrasted when a couple named the Anders, who are tourists from New Jersey, are accused of being spies and seek refuge in the embassy.

Monnette Wright plays the sneering Marion Hollander. Marion's gait is a little in itself with her beady eyes, hunched-over back and raised arms, desperately clutching her blue-light-blue handbag.

Marion is a delightfully loud woman who is very Jewish, very fun," Wright said. "She is a typical Woody Allen mother."

Wright said she modeled her character after Olympia Dukakis' version of the mother in "Moonstruck."

Marion's husband is the offensive and overbearing Walter Hollander, played by Ron Johnson, who manages to turn the embassy upside down by rattling everyone from the embassy cook to visiting dignitaries.

Daughter Susan, played by Mary Parker Williams, finds the family's predicament exhilarating and immediately falls in love with an ambassador's son.

Williams said she liked her character's "zest for life, spontaneity and confidence in herself." Williams visualized her character as being a cross between Ann-Margret and Jane Fonda.

The object of Susan's love, played by Steven Patrick Sater, is an absent-minded and clumsy Axel Magee. He manages to tactlessly add fuel to simple problems and blow them out of proportion.

Throw in a few government aides, communists, Arabs and a Catholic priest, and the play unfolds.

Alumnus to jazz BYU this month

By RUSSELL T. TAYLOR
Universe Staff Writer

BYU alumnus and nationally acclaimed jazz performer Sam Cardon will perform his first solo effort at BYU this month.

Cardon has only done two albums, but both have received attention on the national airplay charts. "Impulse," his first album, soared to the No. 2 spot on the Radio and Records New Adult Contemporary chart. It was also named the No. 22 NAC album for 1989, a rare event for a previously unknown artist.

"Serious," Cardon's most recent album, has already been the most added album on radio stations nationwide.

Cardon, who lives in Orem, started his professional career behind the scenes. As a composer, he has scored music for NBC sports, written themes for ABC's "Monday Night Football" and ABC's "Movie of the Week," and he received a New York Film Festival Award for his promotional music for NBC's "Crime Story."

Cardon and his close friend Kurt Bestor also shared an Emmy Award for their original music scoring for ABC's coverage of the 1988 Winter Olympics, "Fire on Ice." This song was composed as a tribute to the U.S. speed skating team.

As an arranger, his work has been heard on "The Tonight Show Starring Johnny Carson," "The Dolly Parton Show," "Macy's Thanksgiving Day Parade" and the "Bob Hope-Christmas Special."

He has also toured the nation and the world in various performances, including a stint as musical director for the Osmonds.

Cardon has a strong background in The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, and he and his wife have four children.

Cardon doesn't plan on touring extensively no matter how big he gets. "I don't like spending a lot of time away from home," Cardon said. "It really is an unnecessary evil."

However, Cardon enjoys and gears up for his live performances. "Doing a live performance and doing your own album makes you meet your own expectations. When you work in the studio everyone else is telling you what to do," Cardon said.

"You have to learn from your peers," Cardon said. "Newell Dayley, who is now Music Department chairman at BYU, made an impression on all of us doing music now." Cardon credits Dayley as being the person who guided him and gave him direction. Dayley was the jazz band director when Cardon was a BYU student.

In 1983, Cardon left BYU and went to work for Broadcast International, where he developed contacts in this area.

"The industry is coming here for something different, a lower price and to get away," Cardon said. "No one really wants to be in Los Angeles and New York anymore, and the Osmonds really opened the door for musicians in this area."

Cardon also credits part of his success to Randy Thornton and Bryan Hofsheins, who gave him his first shot in the business. They are the owners of Non-Stop Production in Salt Lake City as well as being principal owners of Airus Records.

"Some artists are lousy at business and promotion. These two guys have taken care of all that for me," Cardon said.

Cardon will perform at BYU on Feb. 14 with his eight-piece band. They will also tour San Diego and the San Francisco Bay area.

Brandon Fields, a saxophone player, will join Cardon in the concert. The program will also include Airus Records' artist, Michael Dowdle, a former BYU student.

BYU gymnast Jason Brown works out on the pommel horse Tuesday in the Smith Fieldhouse. Brown is the third BYU gymnast to compete on the U.S. National team.

Brown boosts gymnasts as U.S. team member

By KEN MERRITT
Universe Sports Writer

Some BYU students wouldn't hesitate to join BYU's top male gymnast Jason Brown in throwing darts at his homemade Saddam Hussein dartboard, but when it comes to throwing your body into the air, not many would attempt what Brown does everyday during practice.

"Gymnastics teaches you total body control," Brown said, "but if you miss, it usually hurts."

Brown, who won the individual all-around in a meet against Arizona State University this season, said, "It feels good to do something you've done in practice so many times."

Brown, the third BYU gymnast ever to make the U.S. national team, said he didn't feel like a national level gymnast before coming to BYU.

The main reason he came to BYU was his recruitment by BYU's internationally acclaimed head coach, Mako Sakamoto, who coached Peter Vidmar, Tim Daggett and Mitch Gaylord to victory at the 1984 Summer Olympics.

As a junior majoring in athletic training, with plans to enter physical therapy, Brown hopes to work with sports medicine and with younger gymnasts.

Brown's short-term goals to make the World Championship Team, the World University Games, the Pan American Games and then finally the U.S. Olympic team aren't going to be easy.

Only the top seven U.S. intercollegiate gymnasts will go to Indianapolis for the World Championships and the next seven will go to Cuba for the Pan American Games.

Brown is ranked 10th on the U.S. national team.

"I've got a lot of work ahead of me but I've got the best coach, and being on such a good team helps a lot," he said.

Brown, a gymnast since age 10 and a lifelong member of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, said he likes gymnastics because one is always pushing oneself. He said it feels like you've accomplished something "like in the gospel, you're either moving up or moving down," he said.

"I like gymnastics because I have time to learn it myself... I really feel it's exciting... in any other sport you don't throw your body into the air, try to figure out where you are and then land all in a split second," he said.

Brown spends more than four hours a day with team members.

"Because of our heavy schedule we end up doing a lot with the girls' team, we study together a lot too," he said.

Brown said after coming home from especially nerve-racking meets, like the 1989 meet he attended in Beijing, China, "I'm not scared of anything for a while because nothing is worse than the pressure there — that is until I have to give a talk in sacrament meeting."

Independents form new football league

Associated Press

PROVIDENCE, R.I. — The 30-year dream of an Eastern football league became reality Tuesday with the creation of another Big East conference.

Athletic directors at eight proud football independents saw a future of nightmarish schedules, dominant leagues and dwindling television exposure.

"I think that the climate this time around almost forced the issue," Syracuse athletic director Jake Crouthamel said. "We're talking about the integrity of the schedule and the need to play games."

"When you put it in that context, you get a little shaky-kneed," Independents, said Rutgers athletic director Fred Gruninger, "became an endangered species."

Syracuse, Boston College, Miami of Florida and Pittsburgh, already Big East basketball members, will play Rutgers, Temple, West Virginia and Virginia Tech beginning this fall in the new football conference. Big East Commissioner Mike Tranchese said they will choose a champion this year, but he's not sure how yet because Miami and Virginia Tech will play only one conference game each.

By 1995, all have agreed to play a minimum of five conference games a year.

Rutgers, Temple and West Virginia will stay in the Atlantic 10 for all other sports, and Virginia Tech will continue in the Metro Conference.

William Flynn, recently retired Boston College athletic director who talked up an Eastern league for three decades, beamed and told clustered reporters: "Fundamentally, we've been a league without name or association, and we've missed out on a lot by not being there."

Major market television was on everyone's mind.

Tranchese said the league would expand its 5-year-old in-house network and aim for a football game of the week.

"We're not going to take for granted that people know it's the Big East," Tranchese said. "And by the end of 1991, people will probably be sick and tired of hearing from us."

The eight will meet next week to decide what demands to make of the College Football Association's network TV contract, Tranchese said.

Quote of the day: "I had felt right from the start that if someone was ineligible, that person should not be considered for the Hall of Fame."

— Baseball American League president Bobby Brown on the 12-0 vote by the Hall's board of directors Monday that bans Pete Rose from election into the Hall.

Women work more, earn less social worker tells students social worker Nancy Amidei addresses the "Feminization of Poverty" Tuesday in the Harmon Building.

By REBECCA M. TAYLOR
Universe Staff Writer

Poverty is a problem everyone should take personal responsibility for, said a social worker in a lecture sponsored by the School of Social Work Tuesday.

Nancy Amidei, who is also a syndicated columnist and a faculty member at three different universities, focused on the "feminization" of poverty, which she said is an increasing problem in today's society.

"Women, even if they work more, tend to earn less," she said.

"The poverty rate for black and Hispanic women who work full time, full year, is the same as the poverty rate for white men who work not at all."

Women with college diplomas earn about the same as men with high school diplomas, she said.

Even men who major in fields that are female-dominated earn more, she said.

In addition, women are more likely to be caring for others, creating a financial burden, Amidei said.

"Moving a woman from welfare with Medicaid to a job without benefits is not necessarily a favor," she said.

This is because affordable medical and child care may be impossible for poor women to obtain, she said.

niles however, will not be charged because "there is just nothing we can charge them with," he said.

Johnston's attorney, Don Elkins, told Ballif that although Johnston did have sex with a minor, there is strong evidence the girl was a willing participant.

According to court record the girl approached the men on many occasions asking for cigarettes or liquor in exchange for sexual favors.

Elkins said the girl was not a typical teenager.

She was sexually experienced and had a severe addiction to alcohol and drugs, he said.

However since the girl was under the age of 14 when the incidents occurred, sodomy and sexual intercourse is a first-degree felony even if the girl consents.

Bryson testified in court that the girl's actions "were a result of an association with (the) men."

Since she has been undergoing treatment for the last 8 months at the Utah State Hospital "she is looking much softer and younger, like her 14 years," he said.

Bryson said the girl was a "hard, rough young lady," before her treatment in the hospital.

"I didn't want to be on anybody's bad side and be where I couldn't have drugs," the girl told the court Friday.

Hayes was charged April 19 with a first-degree felony of aggravated sexual abuse of a child, and attempted second-degree rape of a child. He was also charged with furnishing liquor to a minor — a class A misdemeanor. Hayes will be sentenced in two weeks.

Ballif found Hayes competent to stand trial after an evaluation and recommendation from the Utah State Hospital. Hayes allegedly tried to commit suicide on several occasions.

Smith, formerly a temporary employee of the BYU geological department is now serving a sentence in the Utah State Penitentiary. He was charged with rape and sodomy on a child, first-degree felonies, and furnishing liquor to a minor.

NOW attacks '98 Olympic bid

By ROMMYN SKIPPER
Universe Staff Writer

The Utah National Organization for Women hopes to abort Utah's chances for the 1998 Winter Olympics.

Utah NOW is sponsoring a boycott of the Olympics in response to the passage of Senate Bill 23, the Abortion Limitation Bill, said Rebecca Elliott, executive coordinator for Utah NOW.

The bill "really challenges and takes away a woman's right to an abortion. We want people to write to the International Olympic Committee and urge them not to have the Olympics in Utah," she said.

NOW's boycott is aimed at making Utah feel economic pressure for its legislative actions, Elliott said.

The Olympics are only a small part of this boycott. NOW is also asking people to stop skiing in Utah and has asked that companies not relocate to Utah. Groups that had planned to hold conventions in Utah are being asked to go elsewhere in support of the boycott.

Elliott said money seemed the only way to make legislators listen.

"I think our legislature, our government, has underestimated the anger of the pro-choice people," Elliott said.

Elliott said she felt legislators were making laws based on their own morals and judgments instead of those of the people they represent. "I think the majority of the people of the state do not want the legislature making this decision for women," she said.

The Salt Lake City Bid Committee for the Olympic Winter Games said it is not concerned with the proposed boycott. "I don't think that we're necessarily worried about it," said Jill Smith, an intern with the Bid Committee's public relations department.

Smith said the IOC has been impressed with Utah's public support for the Olympics. "They've been very impressed. That's what sells them on Salt Lake," she said.

Bob Bills, assistant director of international relations for the Bid Committee, said the boycott had degraded the pro-abortion movements. "We're actually getting an influx of volunteers" since their announcement, he said.

The Utah Sports Foundation is in charge of the Olympic cycling trials for Salt Lake. Jan Pantelakis said the USF is going ahead with its plans for the trials. "We've already been awarded it, and we're not going to back down on it," she said.

Utah women's group defends abortion law, plans to counter feminists' economic boycott

Associated Press

SALT LAKE CITY — The Utah Association of Women says it will counter a threatened feminist boycott of the state over recent passage of stringent anti-abortion legislation.

Susan Roylance, president-elect of the 300-member UAW, said Monday her group wants to make sure it is known that most women in Utah oppose legalized abortion.

"We feel a statement needs to be made that the Legislature did represent the women of Utah," Roylance said.

"As women, and mothers, we appreciate this effort by our Legislature to help protect the young women of Utah from those who would become wealthy through the destruction of unborn children," she said.

The new law bans abortions except in cases of rape and incest, or where the mother's health is imperiled or the fetus has grave physical defects.

The Utah Chapter of the National Organization for Women, decried the bill as an infringement on a woman's right to reproductive choice, and has vowed to urge conventions and tourists to stay away from Utah.

Local NOW officials also have said they will campaign to keep the proposed 1998 Winter Olympic Games out of Utah.

Utah is the U.S. Olympic Committee's candidate.

Roylance said her group will write other anti-abortion groups nationwide seeking their support.

U.S. hospitals ready to ship blood to gulf

By CORDY WEST
Universe Staff Writer

Although the military stockpiles its own blood supply, hospitals in the United States have been placed on stand by to supply blood to troops in Operation Desert Storm if necessary.

Military hospitals get blood donations from troop members. If supply gets low, civilian hospitals send blood to the military through the American Association of Blood Banks in Arlington, Va.

"Right now, blood donations are on a voluntary basis only. If a need for blood arises, then the hospital will go public, asking for more blood donations. But at this time, this is not the case," said Karen Tribett, donor resource coordinator of the blood bank at Utah Valley Regional Medical Center in Provo.

A blood drive will continue through Thursday in the East Ballroom Lounge of the Ernest L. Wilkinson Center. Yellow ribbons are given to those who donate blood.

"For the duration of the war, all hospitals have been put on stand by to send blood to the troops if the need arises," Tribett said. "However, there haven't been enough casualties to require a heightened demand for blood."

"Hospitals are not suffering from a lack of a blood supply," said Chloe Langston, health and safety director for the American Red Cross chapter in Provo.

"Currently, National Headquarters of the American Red Cross is sending 1,000 units of blood to the gulf per day," Langston said.

Eight hundred additional units are prepared as a daily backup. However, the Red Cross chapter does not handle the shipment of blood because Intermountain Health Care is so strong in this area, Langston said.

The number of donations has increased since the gulf war started. Blood has a shelf life of 42 days, however, and all blood types are needed.

"We've done very well when we have come to BYU for blood donations," Tribett said.
